THEY SAID HE COULDT DO IT, in fact he missed three times last year. One friend even said he'd eat feathers and all if he did it this year - - so on Saturday, opening day of turkey season, K. E. "Red" Coleman got an early start, headed to the woods with his hunting gear, loaded shot gun, and with loads of determination bagged the 19 pound 12 ounce gobbler shown above. The big turkey, killed in Appomattox County, had a beard 11¾ inches long - about the length of the proud grin on Red's face.

Litter Clean-Up Costs County $5,512.41

The bill for picking up litter from along Virginia's 51,000 miles of state-maintained roads climbed to $1,597,988 in 1973-74, and the State Department of Highways and Transportation called for the public's help in reducing the cost this year.

In Appomattox County, the litter clean-up expenditures amounted to a total of $5,512.41 with $4,329.26 being spent on primary road clean-up and $1,183.15 being spent on the secondary road clean-up.

The past fiscal year was the third in a row in which the litter bill had exceeded a million dollars. In 1972-73, it amounted to $1,020,888 in 1971-72, $1,050,732.

Citizens can help reduce the cost this year by keeping and using a litter container in their vehicles; by using litter barrels placed at intervals along Virginia's highways; and by encouraging the establishment and use of adequate local refuse disposal facilities if they are not already provided. Besides being ugly and costly, litter can also be a safety hazard. Wind-blown trash can distract motorists and obstruct their visibility, and on occasion has struck windshields of moving vehicles.

Approximately 5,500 department employees are helping in the statewide cleanup, using some 2,200 trucks and other pieces of equipment. By the time the job's completed, they will have worked an estimated 130,000 man-hours.

We all can do our share in cutting the cost of litter clean-up . . . USE A LITTER BAG.

Why An Eye In The Sky?

An individual associated with aerospace activity recently traveled to the northwest, down the coast to southern California and back to the east coast.

He was troubled when some people still asked: "Why do we waste all that money on space?"

One quick answer, among more than 4000 available, was "How many people are walking around alive today with heart pacemakers that came right out of the U.S. space effort?"

Take just one small facet of the space program — the Earth Resources Technology Satellite (ERTS-1).

Some 560 miles above us, this U.S.-made satellite launched in July 1972 to serve for a single year, still focuses its keen eyes on Earth. Covering a wide band around our globe every 103 minutes, it provides information of inestimable value to all mankind. The multiple tasks of this first ERTS will be assumed in January 1975 by a twin brother.

ERTS is helping us where we live and how we live in a way that no other effort by man could manage. As the National Aeronautics and Space Administration says, we are ". . . rediscovering the earth through space technology."

This rediscovery relates directly to the energy crisis. To pollution. To diminishing land, mineral and water resources. To population growth. To forces that wreak havoc on agriculture in a hungry world. To urban decay. In short, to major problems of modern society.

Do we want to:

- know about remote and unexplored earth formations that might promise hidden sources of oil or natural gas, or mineral deposits?
- identify new water resources and better manage those we already know about?
- narrow the selection of routes for roads and highways without lengthy ground surveys?
- know who is polluting water resources and the air, where and with what?
- know where and to what extent valuable agricultural crops, or forests, are being damaged by insects or diseases?
- have more accurate maps and charts for navigation and for the management of land resources?

There are no simple solutions to these very real requirements. Conventional tools and techniques no longer can cope. They are too slow, too cumbersome, too imprecise.

But space technology has stepped in to provide information that can help us make rational decisions. These are coming from the more than 100,000 pictures returned by ERTS-1 as it scans our Earth from space.

Also, these benefits come from only a small share of that less than 2¢ of the tax dollar that supports our space program.

What has space done for us lately?

We shouldn't need to ask.
